Abstract This report, prepared for the NES Research and Development Conference on Values and Predispositions held February 1995, summarizes selected pilot study reports from each NES pilot study between 1983 and 1991. Each pilot study report reviewed by Bowers focuses on the measurement of values and predispositions. The reports evaluate pilot measures of concepts such as the values of equality and individualism, moral values, civic obligation, nationalism, and symbolic racism. Bowers' report summarizes each study's assessment of the reliability and validity of the measures under examination as well as their relationship to measures of political attitudes and behaviors and background variables. His report includes the text of each measure being evaluated.
