

The 14-day Comments Period for the 2007-2009 ANES Panel Study Has Begun

Please help us evaluate the proposals for this exciting new study

Today begins the 14-day period in which all members of the research community can help us evaluate the many new proposals that have been put forward for the 2007-2009 ANES Panel Study.

Between now and February 14, we ask that you make a small, but important, contribution to the development of this new study by offering advice that we and the proposals authors' can use to increase the effectiveness of the Panel Study.

We are most interested in comments that can increase the range of hypothesis tests in which particular questions can be used as well as advice about how we can use these proposals to leverage the unique temporal aspects of the Panel Study's design. For details, see:

http://www.electionstudies.org/announce/newsltr/ANES_OCpanel_20061023.pdf

At the end of this letter is a list of the proposals that we received. You can read the full proposals in the Online Commons at:

<http://www.electionstudies.org>

If you can comment on even one of these proposals, it will help ANES a great deal.

Please note that at the conclusion of the comment period, proposal authors will then have two additional weeks to revise their proposals in response to any comments that they may receive. So this is a moment where your advice can make a difference. In addition, the ANES PIs and Board of Overseers will make extensive use of your comments when they select questions for inclusion on the survey.

All comments must be made through the Online Commons. If you would like to make a comment and are not yet an OC member, signing up is easy. All it takes is filling out a simple form at:

<http://www.electionstudies.org/onlinecommons.htm>

The new ANES Panel Study has the potential to help scholars examine electoral dynamics in an unprecedented way. Please take a moment to help ANES make the most effective use of this great new opportunity.

Sincerely,

Jon A. Krosnick and Arthur Lupia
Principal Investigators
