□>> VIII.G. SOURCES OF SENATE CONTEXTUAL DATA (1988, 1990, 1992)

Sources of Senate Contextual Data - 1988 (see section headings in codebook)

1988 Election Information

General election results come from official results available at the Federal Election Commission, Washington, D.C. Democratic percentage of the two-party vote was calculated by hand. All primary election information (dates and returns) are from an unpublished briefing book on 1988 Senate elections prepared by CBS.

Background of Senator #1

Personal information about the incumbent's background was found in (1) Ehrenhalt, Alan ed. 1987. Politics in America; The 100th Congress. Washington: Congressional Quarterly Inc. and (2) Barone, Michael and Grant Ujifusa. 1987. The Almanac of American Politics 1988. Washington: National Journal Inc. In addition, where incumbents were also candidates for reelection, supplemental sources included the CBS briefing book (above), Congressional Quarterly's Special Report on the 1988 elections (10/15/88), and, when available, responses to CQ's candidate questionnaire generously made available by Phil Duncan, Political Editor of Congressional Quarterly Weekly Report.

Previous incumbent election results were found in Scammon, Richard M. and Alice V. McGillivray eds. 1987. America Votes 17. Washington: Congressional Quarterly Inc.

Mass mailings include government paid mailings which are not responses to inquiries, press releases, or mail to officials. The number of mass mail pieces from the third quarter of 1985 is published semi-annually in the Report of the Secretary of the Senate, Washington: Government Printing Office. Comparable figures are not available for members of the House.

Seniority rankings, attendance percentages, group (ADA, ACU, AFL-CIO, CCUS) ratings, presidential support, party unity, and conservative coalition scores are published in Congressional Quarterly Almanac (Vols. XXXIX to XLIV), and in Politics in America (above). In cases where a Senator was a member of the House (1983-88) before the Senate, his/her House scores were coded. Not applicable (NA, i.e. where an incumbent was neither a Senator nor a Representative during some part of 1983-88, or for other reasons missed votes) is coded as 999.

National Journal scores are published yearly in the weekly periodical and in the Almanac of American Politics. See paragraph above for former House members, and NAs.

See Background of Senator #1 section above.

Election Predictions

Election predictions were published in (1) CQ's Special Report (10/15/88), The GRC Cook Political Report, Washington; The Government Research Corporation (5/31/88 & 10/28/88), and (3) Roll Call (10/30/88).

Campaign manager, media consultant and pollster data were found in the National Journal (10/22/88), and Campaign Industry News (August, 1988). Staff at the National Republican Senate Committee added some additional information over the phone.

Campaign Spending

Campaign spending figures are preliminary tabulations made public by the Federal Election Commission in its press release of February 24, 1989. PAC receipts are not available separate from other committees until the final figures become available next year. Robert Biersak of the FEC was kind enough to calculate preliminary independent expenditure figures for this dataset.

State Political Data

State partisanship and ideology figures were calculated from 1976-1985 CBS/New York Times polls by Professor Gerald Wright of Indiana University.

State party organizational strength scores are from Table 2.4 (pp. 28-9) of Cotter, Cornelius P., James L. Gibson, John F. Bibby, and Robert Huckshorn. 1984. Party Organizations in American Politics. New York: Praeger.

Democratic Party Liberalism and Republican Party Conservatism scores have been provided by Larry M. Bartels. These measures are updated versions of the scores originally appearing in Tables 8.2 and 9.2 of his 1988 book, Presidential Primaries and the Dynamics of Public Choice. Princeton, New Jersey: Princeton University Press.

1988 election returns are from the FEC (see 1988 election information above). Two-party percentages were calculated by hand. Previous election returns are found in Scammon (1987).

State legislative results are published in CQ Weekly Report (11/19/88).

State Demographic, Geographic, and Economic Data

FEC voting age population figures come from the FEC's February 5, 1988 press release.

1987 population (v5377), percent population increase (v5378), percent metropolitan residents (v5382), net migration (v5388), and percent over age 64 (v5407) are found in U.S. Department of Commerce. 1987. Statistical Abstract of the United States 1988. Washington: Government Printing Office. Net migration "comprises net immigration from abroad, net interregional, interdivisional, or interstate migration, and the movement of persons in the armed forces" (pg. 21).

Percent black (v5379), Asian (v5380), Spanish origin (v5381), 1-3 years college (v5402), 4 or more years of college (v5403), below poverty line (v5404), housing units rented (v5405) are from The Almanac of American Politics 1988.

Percent born in state (v5383), white-collar workers (v5384), blue-collar workers (v5385), square miles in state (v5386), percent of area farmed (v5387), tax burden per capita (v5400), and median family income (v5406) are from Politics in America; The 100th Congress.

Percent of residents at current address for two years or less was calculated from the Voter Supplement File of the 1980 Current Population Survey by Michael Hagen of the State Data Program at the University of California, Berkeley. The Current Population Survey was made available by the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research.

State unemployment rates for December 1987 to September 1988 were supplied in a computer printout by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor. December 1988 figures are in the Bureau's February 14, 1989 press release.

Total personal income comes from table 5 of the Department of Commerce's April 20, 1989 press release, "Regional Differences In Per Capita Personal Income Continued To Widen In 1988." Figures reflect total personal income, including farm income. The Department does not calculate per capita income quarterly.

Violent crime figures are from the FBI's 1988 report on Crime in the United States.

Campaign Content

Campaign content codes were devised by Richard F. Fenno, Jr., Gary C. Jacobson, Jonathan Krasno, Thomas E. Mann, and Raymond E. Wolfinger. Coding was done by Jonathan Krasno, with the assistance of James Glaser of the State Data Program at the University of California, Berkeley.

Themes were culled from accounts of Senate elections in CQ's Special Report on the 1988 elections (above), Roll Call (10/30/88), CBS's briefing book (above), The GRC Cook Political Report (10/28/88), the Presidential Campaign Hotline (daily) from 10/1/88 to 11/8/88, and all issues of the Political Report (weekly) from 9/1/88 to 11/8/88. For example CQ wrote the following about the campaign waged in New Jersey by Pete Dawkins (R) against incumbent Frank Lautenberg (D):

Many of Dawkins' criticisms are standard GOP fare: He says Lautenberg has voted for 17 tax increases and describes him as an extreme liberal opposed to a strong national defense. But Dawkins, 50, also goes after Lautenberg in some of his areas of supposed strength. Despite Lautenberg's list of endorsements from environmental groups, Dawkins says he should have done more to prevent beach pollution, which is hurting the state's tourism industry. Trying to fashion the choice as a matter of stature, Dawkins implies that his past...is an omen of future political greatness. He calls Lautenberg a back-bencher, referring to him as "New Jersey's junior senator."

But Dawkins may have a hard time convincing voters that Lautenberg is devoid of stature...(pg. 2923)

From this passage five different negative themes--taxes (16), conservatism/liberalism (12), weakness on defense (18), environment (20), and lack of national stature (0)--and one positive theme--national stature (0)--were attributed to Dawkins' campaign. Other sources provided additional information.

Campaign themes are NOT listed in order of importance or chronological order. Where seven or fewer campaign themes in a single category were found all were coded. In cases where more than seven themes were evident, coding was done on the basis of mentions in the most sources.

1990 Election Information

General election and primary election results come from various issues of Congresssional Quarterly Weekly Report.

Background of Senator #1

Wherever possible, data were taken from the 1988 Senate Election Study Contextual Dataset for those Senators who were covered in the 1988 study. Much of this documentation, then, is from the 1988 Contextual dataset.

Personal information about the incumbent's background was found in (1) Ehrenhalt, Alan ed. 1987. Politics in America; The 100th Congress. Washington: Congressional Quarterly Inc. and (2) Barone, Michael and Grant Ujifusa. 1987. The Almanac of American Politics 1988. Washington: National Journal Inc. and (3) Barone, Michael and Grant Ujifusa. 1989. The Almanac of American Politics 1990. Washington: National Journal Inc. In addition, where incumbents were also candidates for reelection, supplemental sources included the CBS briefing book (above), Congressional Quarterly's Special Report on the 1988 elections (10/15/88), Congressional Quarterly's Special Report on the 1990 elections (10/13/90), when available, responses to CQ's candidate questionnaire generously made available by Phil Duncan, Political Editor of Congressional Quarterly Weekly Report [1988], and in a few cases from biographical data provided directly from campaign offices.

Previous incumbent election results were found in (1) Scammon, Richard M. and Alice V. McGillivray eds. 1987. America Votes 17. Washington: Congressional Quarterly Inc. and (2) Politics in America (above).

Mass mailings include government paid mailings which are not responses to inquiries, press releases, or mail to officials. □>>X. APPENDIX A: 1992 TECHNICAL MEMORANDUM, SAMPLING SECTION, ISR

Technical Memorandum
Sampling Section

Subject: 1992 Senate Election Study
Date: March 29, 1993

I. Introduction

The 1992 Senate Election Study is a telephone survey of U.S. household residents (including Alaska and Hawaii but excluding the District of Columbia). This 1992 study is the third wave of a three-part Senate Election Study. The previous two waves of the study were conducted in 1988 and 1990. The purpose of the Senate Election Studies is to study the relationship between U.S. citizens and their U.S. Senators and to explore the nature of the voter's choice in selecting members of the U.S. Senate. The study population includes all U.S. household residents who are at least 18 years old on or before the 1992 Election Day (November 3) and are citizens of the U.S.

II. Sample Design Description

The Random-Digit-Dial (RDD) sample design used for the 1992 Senate Election Study is a "list assisted" or "listed hundred series" (LHS) design that selects telephone numbers using the GENESYS RDD sampling system. The GENESYS system is a PC-based RDD sampling system designed by Marketing Systems Group (MSG). This "list assisted" RDD design uses a one-stage selection of telephone numbers with no clustering. Samples of RDD telephone numbers are selected from a frame consisting of all the possible numbers that can be generated from a hundred series (the first eight digits of a phone number) which have at least two listed household phone numbers.

There are several advantages to this design: (1) Unlike the two-stage Mitofsky-Waksberg design, there is no clustering of sample numbers within a hundred series. The final sample is a stratified random sample of telephone households. For the same number of cases, sampling errors should be lower than those for the Mitofsky-Waksberg design. (2) In the telephone interviewing facility, the LHS design can be administered as a list sample. The LHS design requires no pre-screening of a primary stage sample of RDD telephone numbers. There is no conditional replacement of non-working and non-household numbers. This is especially helpful for quick turnaround studies, like the 1992 Senate Election Study.

The main disadvantage of the LHS RDD design is that it does not guarantee complete coverage of telephone households. Telephone households in hundred series with no listed numbers or hundred series that are new since the last update of the LHS frame are not covered. This under coverage increases as the age of the LHS frame increases. For the time period within six months of the frame creation date, the non-coverage appears to be less than three percent of telephone households. The GENESYS frame used for selection was updated October 1992.

The GENESYS RDD sampling system uses an LHS frame based on the Donnelley file of all directory listings. One advantage of this system is that each hundred series in the frame is assigned FIPS county codes that make RDD samples of specific geographic areas convenient. This county coding is also helpful in assigning Congressional District Codes later.

An independent equal probability sample of 400 RDD telephone numbers was selected in each of the 50 states (including AK and HI but excluding DC). Each state sample was divided into "replicates" or sub-samples of varying sizes (see the table below). A working rate of about 53% was assumed, and a target of 56 completed interviews was set per state. To set initial sample sizes response rates across states could be estimated from the previous two Senate Election surveys. For example, if the estimated response rate for a state is .65 the expected size of the state the sample was estimated to be:

Completed Interviews	56
Estimated Response Rate	.65
Required Household Contacts	86
Working Rate for Households	.53
Expected RDD Sample Numbers	162

After the sample was generated, it was sent to the Survey Research Center (SRC) to add the following codes: split half Sample Flag, Senate race type codes, Replicate Code, Sample ID, and Respondent Selection Table number.

Replicates of varying sizes enabled the released sample to be tailored to the expected response rates for each state, and allowed for a fine control over the released sample during the interviewing period. Each replicate is itself a probability sample. The Replicate codes for each state sample were assigned as follows:

Replicate #	Size
1	80
2	50
3	30
4	30
5	20
6	10
7	10
9	10

After the replicate code assignment, the sample file was sent back to MSG to screen for non-working and business numbers. These numbers were classified as non-sample.

III. Sampling Weights

Table 1 contains the following information for each state sample: the state abbreviation, state fips code, number of working telephone numbers, total number of released replicates, probability of selection, household weight, and relative household weight. Since the 1992 NES Senate Election Study design assigns different probabilities to households in the states, it was necessary to calculate a household sampling weight. The household weight value for each state sample was calculated by the following equation:

$$W_{state} = \frac{\# \text{ of working banks (state)} \times 100}{\text{total telephone \#'s released (state)}}$$

Once a household telephone number was selected and called, if there was more than one eligible person living in the household a random respondent was chosen using a respondent selection table developed by Kish (1949). Because only one person in a household was selected to respond from all eligible household members, persons in smaller households had a greater chance of selection than persons in larger households. Therefore, for person level analyses, the household weight should be multiplied by the number of eligible persons in the household to create a final weight for pooled analysis of states data.

THIS APPENDIX APPLIES ONLY TO THE WEIGHTS FOR 1990 CASES AND FIRST APPEARED AS APPENDIX A TO THE 1990 SENATE ELECTION STUDY

Technical Memorandum
Sampling Section
Subject: 1990 Senate Election Study
Date: 15 March 1991

I. Introduction

The 1990 Senate Election Study uses a dual-frame design telephone sample with approximately half of the sample selected from a frame of listed numbers and half generated using an RDD procedure. This dual-frame design is different from the dual-frame design used in earlier ISR studies. In the earlier dual-frame design, a two-stage sample selection (Waksberg design) was used for the RDD component of the sample. In the Waksberg design, a first stage sample of primary numbers is selected and called to see if the primary numbers are working household numbers. A second stage sample of telephone numbers is selected from only the hundred series formed from the first eight digits of the working primary numbers. This design results in a higher RDD working rate than a completely random generation of phone numbers. (The working rate for primary numbers is approximately 20%; the working rate for the secondary stage numbers is about 60%).

The new RDD design used for the first time in the 1990 Senate Election Study involves the generation of random telephone numbers from the set of hundred series in the list sample. Each hundred series from the list sample is known to have at least one listed phone number--the number selected for the list sample. From ongoing methodological research, the Survey Research Center has a data set containing the count of listed numbers for each possible hundred series.

Within each of the fifty states, an equal probability sample of random numbers was generated using a version of the "PPS-to-listed counts" two-stage RDD design which James Lepkowski of the Survey Research Center has been researching. This design has several advantages: (1) the cost of primary number screening is eliminated. (2) a more equal allocation of the sample between List and RDD cases can be achieved economically. The sample is divided equally between List and RDD components. In the dual-frame design using the Waksberg RDD procedure, the typical allocation was 25% RDD and 75% List. This more equal allocation reduces the ratio of weights between unlisted and listed numbers by approximately one half and reduces the variance due to weighting effects. (3) the procedure for handling RDD cases in the telephone facility is simplified. No replacement procedure for non-working numbers is needed. The RDD cases can be handled in the same way as list cases.

In addition to these general advantages of the new design, an additional advantage relevant to the 1990 Senate Election Study was the ability to impute the Congressional District from the "donor" hundred series in the Survey Sampling list sample to the telephone numbers which were randomly generated from the hundred series. The accurate assignment of Congressional District codes was required by the Senate Election Study questionnaire. The form of questionnaire used was dependent on the type of Senate and Congressional race in the Congressional District.

There is one disadvantage of this design compared to the Waksberg design. In the "PPS-to-listed counts" design, unlisted numbers in a hundred series which has no listed numbers do not have a chance of selection. This type of occurrence would be unusual and is a very minor coverage problem. The dual-frame sample design used for the 1990 Senate Election Study is described in Section II.

II. Description of Dual-Frame Sample Design

A sample of 10,000 listed household telephone numbers was purchased from Survey Sampling, Inc--200 listed numbers from each of the fifty states. The sample was actually fifty separate samples, each with a different sampling rate, $200/n_{list}$, where n_{list} is the number of listed numbers in Survey Sampling's sampling frame for the state. The listed numbers were selected by Survey Sampling from their stratified 1-in-6 sample of all listed telephone numbers. In addition to the name, address, and telephone number, Survey Sampling provided Congressional District codes and FIPS state and county codes.

The PPS-to-Listed dual-frame design required that the number of sample-listed numbers be approximately equal to the number of RDD sample telephone numbers. The list sample of 200 numbers per state allowed for the generation of 200 random telephone numbers. The four hundred cases per state was divided into replicates of varying sizes. The use of replicates allows for control of the sample size during the interviewing period in case the actual response rate and telephone-working rate is different than anticipated. Each replicate could stand alone as a probability sample.

Using the listed counts file which gives the number of listed household telephone numbers in each hundred series, the average number of listed numbers in hundred series with at least one listed number ($K...$) was found for each state. The number of listed telephone numbers from the listed counts file was merged with the sample of 10,000 listed telephone numbers. Each listed number was assigned an Expected Sample Size (ESS) of $K...$ divided by the number of listed numbers in the hundred series ($MOS...$). This ESS was then converted to an integer by using a random rounding procedure. The integer ESS for the listed numbers was used to determine how many random telephone numbers to generate (without replacement) for the hundred series. The number could range from 0 to 4 with an expected number of 1 (for hundred series with an average number of listed numbers). Therefore the expected number of random numbers generated will equal the number of hundred series used from the list sample.

In practice, the number generated will not be exactly equal to the number of hundred series in the list sample. The actual number of random numbers generated for each state from the 200 listed numbers was usually greater than 200. The procedure was then repeated reducing each ESS by a factor of $(200/\text{Actual Number Generated})$ before converting it to an integer. This second procedure resulted in a sample of 10,072 random telephone numbers.

A third stage of sample selection is the random selection of a single respondent from among all eligible adults in the household. A respondent selection table developed by Leslie Kish was used for choosing the random respondent. The probability of an eligible person in a household being selected to be a respondent is $(1/\text{Number of Eligible Adults})$.

III. Use of Sampling Weights

Because of the unequal probabilities of selections for cases across the fifty states and for listed and unlisted telephone numbers within a state, a sampling weight should be used for all analyses involving univariate descriptive statistics or simple regressions. A statistician should be consulted about the use of the selection weight for more complex multivariate analyses.

A sampling weight was created and added to the data set SXRR:SES.DA3. The lowest sampling weight (inverse of the probability of selection) is 505.48 for listed numbers in Alaska. The highest sampling weight was 93,567.66 for unlisted numbers in the state of New York. Relative sampling weights were computed for listed and unlisted numbers in each state by dividing each sampling weight by the lowest sampling weight, 505.48. The relative weights ranged from 1.00 to 185.11. This large variation in weights reduces the efficiency of estimates far below nominal sample size. The loss in efficiency due to weighting which is a type of "design effect" can be approximated by the following formula: $DEFF_{weighting} = (w_i^2 / (\bar{w})^2) \times n$. In this formula, " w_i " is the weight for a case and " n " is the sample size. For this sample, the $DEFF_{weighting}$ is about 2.92. This means that the effective sample size is $3,349 / 2.92 = 1,147$.

A weight equal to the relative sampling weight divided by the number of different telephone numbers by which the household can be reached should be used for household-level analyses. For person-level analyses, the weight should equal the product of the household weight and the number of eligible persons in the household.

IV. Calculation of Sampling Weights

The calculation of a sampling weight requires the computation of three probabilities of selection: RDD, List, and Joint. This computation was done for each of the fifty states. An example of the calculation of the sampling weights for cases with listed and unlisted telephone numbers for Michigan is shown below:

(1) fRDD

1st stage: 200 out of 371,020 listed Michigan household phone numbers from Survey Sampling's 1-in-6 frame were selected. Each of the 200 numbers selected was used to form a hundred series. The probability that any hundred series was selected is proportional to its number of listed telephone numbers (MOS...).

2nd stage: The number of random telephone numbers generated or the expected sample size (ESS) for each of the 200 hundred series was $52 \times (200/235)$ divided by the number of listed numbers in the hundred series (MOS...), and the probability of a random number being generated was the expected sample size (ESS) divided by 100. The random telephone numbers were assigned to replicates and 128 random numbers were in replicates used for the study.

The overall probability of selection for a RDD number is the product of the first and second stage probabilities:

$$\begin{aligned} \text{fRDD} &= 200 \times \text{MOS...} / (371020 \times 6) \times (52/\text{MOS...}) / 100 \times 200/235 \\ &\quad \times 128/200 \\ &= 2.5446 \times 10^{-5} \end{aligned}$$

(2) fL

Survey Sampling, Inc. selected 200 listed telephone number from its

1-in-6 sample file of 371,020 listed Michigan telephone numbers. Of the 200 numbers selected, 130 were in replicates used for the study. The probability of a telephone number being selected for the list sample is $200 / (371020 \times 6) \times 130 / 200 = 5.8398 \times 10^{-5}$.

(3) fJ

The joint probability of selection for the RDD/List Dual Frame is:

$$\begin{aligned} fJ &= fRDD + fL - (fRDD \times fL) \\ &= 2.5446 \times 10^{-5} + 5.8398 \times 10^{-5} - (2.5446 \times 10^{-5} \times \\ &\quad 5.8398 \times 10^{-5}) \\ &= 8.3842 \times 10^{-5} \end{aligned}$$

Listed numbers could have been selected from either the RDD procedure or from the Survey Sampling frame of listed numbers. The weight for listed numbers is, therefore, the inverse of the joint probability of selection or 11,927.12.

Unlisted numbers could have only been selected from the RDD frame. The weight for RDD numbers is the inverse of the RDD probability of selection or 39,298.24. These weights can be expressed as relative sampling weights by dividing both weights by the Joint (Listed) weight. The relative weight for the listed numbers in Michigan is then 1.00, and the Michigan unlisted numbers have a relative weight of $39,298.24 / 11927.12 = 3.295$.

In order to determine which of the RDD cases were unlisted numbers, a match was performed by Survey Sampling of all RDD interview cases against their list of all listed household telephone numbers. The match rate for the RDD interview cases in Michigan was 68.4% or 26 listed numbers out of 38 RDD interview cases. Therefore, if only Michigan cases were considered, 59 cases (33 List + 59 RDD) have a relative sampling weight of 1.00 and 12 RDD cases have a relative sampling weight of 3.295. The overall match rate for RDD interview cases for the entire sample of fifty states 65.5%.

Table 1 shows the sampling weights and relative sampling weights for cases with listed and unlisted telephone numbers by state.
